Economic Scene

Weighing the True Costs and Benefits in a Matter of Life and Death

By ROBERT H. FRANK

DO the poor deserve life support?” asks the economist Steven E. Landsburg in an article published under that title in Slate this month (www.slate.com/id/2133518/?nav=fo). The subtitle says: “A woman who couldn’t pay her bills is unplugged from her ventilator and dies. Is this wrong?” Mr. Landsburg invokes “economic considerations” to suggest that the answer is “no.”

Many commentators have attacked his argument as morally preposterous. Well, yes. But it is also economically preposterous. The two judgments are related. But before an attempt at explaining why, here are some details of the case, from the Slate article and the Dallas-Fort Worth television station WFAA:

The patient was Tirhas Habtegeris, a 27-year-old legal immigrant being kept alive by a ventilator as she lay dying of cancer last month in the Baylor Regional Medical Center in Plano, Tex. Physicians offered no prospect for her recovery. She was hoping, however, to hang on until her East African mother could reach her bedside.

Ms. Habtegeris had little money and no health insurance. On Dec. 1, hospital authorities notified her brother that unless another hospital could be found to treat his sister, Baylor would be forced to discontinue care after 10 days. But even with Baylor’s assistance, the family was unable to find a willing hospital. True to its word, Baylor disconnected her ventilator on Dec. 12, invoking a law signed in 1999 by George W. Bush, then governor of Texas. The law relieved doctors of an obligation to provide life-sustaining treatment 10 days after having provided formal notice that such treatment was found to be medically “inappropriate.”

Unlike the comatose Terri Schiavo, Ms. Habtegeris was fully conscious and responsive when she was disconnected, according to her brother. She wanted to continue breathing. Her brother and several other family members have described the agonizing spectacle of her death by suffocation over the next 16 minutes. Her mother never got there. (Baylor officials have said their decision had nothing to do with financial considerations.)

In Baylor's defense, Mr. Landsburg argues that Ms. Habtegeris's treatment would have failed the economist's basic cost-benefit test, which says that an action should be taken only if its benefit exceeds its cost. The cost of care is relatively easy to calculate, but measuring its benefit is more difficult, and it is here that Mr. Landsburg stumbles.

In general, economists measure the benefit of an action as what its beneficiaries would be willing to pay to see it taken. To place a rough upper bound on the benefit of supporting Ms. Habtegeris, Mr. Landsburg asks us to imagine that before her illness, she had been given a choice between free ventilator insurance and $75 in cash (his illustrative estimate of the cost of providing a healthy young person with such insurance). He assumes, plausibly, that she would have chosen the cash. The implication, he believes, is that the benefit of extending Ms. Habtegeris's care must be less than its cost.

He is mistaken for multiple reasons. For one thing, he ignores the economically compelling reasons for having social safety nets in the first place. Even those who are not poor recognize that catastrophe is only one unlucky break away. One might lose one's job and be unable to afford health insurance, for example, or be stranded by a mountain blizzard and unable to afford a helicopter rescue. With such prospects in mind, most people favor collectively financed rescue efforts. That a poor person would not, or could not, buy private insurance against such contingencies is entirely beside the point.

Even more troubling, Mr. Landsburg completely ignores moral emotions like sympathy and empathy. As economists since Adam Smith have recognized, economic judgments are often tempered by these emotions. The upshot is that large numbers of people benefit when a patient in imminent mortal danger receives treatment. Had the opportunity presented itself, many would have eagerly contributed to Ms. Habtegiris's care. But organizing an endless series of individual private fund-raisers for such cases is impractical. So, we empower government to step in when the need arises.

Mr. Landsburg's argument finesses the important distinction between a "statistical life" and an "identified life." The concepts were introduced by the economist Thomas C. Schelling, who observed the apparent paradox that communities often spend millions of dollars to save the life of a known victim - someone trapped in a mine, for example - yet are often unwilling to spend even $200,000 on a highway guardrail that would save an average of one life each year.

This disparity is not economically irrational, Mr. Schelling insisted, because the community values what it is buying so differently in the two cases. It is one thing to risk one's own life in an unlikely automobile accident, but quite another to abandon a known victim in distress.

By offering a transparently unsound economic argument in defense of the Habtegiris decision, Mr. Landsburg unwittingly empowers those who wrongly insist that costs and benefits have no legitimate role in policy decisions about health and safety. Reducing the small risks we face every day is expensive. The same money could be spent instead on other pressing needs. We cannot think intelligently about these decisions without weighing the relevant costs and benefits.

But using cost-benefit analysis does not make one a moral monster. In the wealthiest nation on earth, a genuine cost-benefit test would never dictate unplugging a fully conscious, responsive patient from life support against her objections. Mr. Landsburg's argument to the contrary is wrongheaded, not just morally, but also economically.

Robert H. Frank, an economist at the Johnson School of Management at Cornell University, is the co-author, with Ben S. Bernanke, of "Principles of Economics."

Meet D.C.’s Hostess of the Mostest

By ANNA SCHNEIDER-MAYERSON Staff Reporter of the Sun

A certain mystique has surrounded Jennifer 8. Lee ever since, as a teenager, she added a number to spice up her common name.

It followed her to the New York Times, where she became a staff reporter at age 24. And it’s trailed the 27-year-old to Washington, D.C., where Ms. Lee has become better known for her parties than for her peculiar byline.

In just a year in Washington, Ms. Lee has fashioned a high-powered and occasionally raucous social circuit around the brunches and barbeques, dinner parties and poker nights, holiday soirees, and intimate concerts she hosts on a nearly weekly basis in her penthouse loft.

While the BYOB policy and aluminum tins of fried dumplings at her parties may not have been to Katharine Graham’s taste, that isn’t stopping the lofty comparisons from flowing.

“Jenny is the Pamela Harriman and Katharine Graham for D.C.’s younger set,” says Adam Kovacevich, 27, the deputy press secretary for Senator Lieberman’s presidential campaign, who has co-hosted a party with Ms. Lee.

“There’s that tradition of grand dame hostesses in D.C. I think Jenny’s like the 21st-century version,” says Christian Bailey, 28, a buyout fund manager whose taste of the social scene at Ms. Lee’s swayed him to move to Washington from New York.

Ms. Lee's salons, held in a dramatic loft in a raggedy part of northwest Washington, have become famous among young Washingtonians as much for their bohemian bon vivant atmosphere as for some of the invitees.

In the chipper and maternal Ms. Lee, ambitious 20-and-30-somethings have found a plugged-in peer who's filling several voids.

For one thing, she's capable of attracting bigwigs from the press-politics-interest group trifecta that might normally be out of their league.

People like Times managing editor Jill Abramson, anti-tax crusader Grover Norquist, New Yorker writer Katherine Boo, MoveOn.org organizing director Zack Exley, columnist Harold Meyerson, and a top aide to presidential candidate John Edwards, Robert Gordon, have all stopped by.

"There's some mysterious quality about Jenny Lee that causes people to show up," says Marc Ambinder, 25, a friend from college who is a producer at ABC News. (Mysterious she likes to remain. Ms. Lee declined requests for an on-the-record interview, saying she didn't consider herself newsworthy.)

To be sure, her resume is an essential part of her appeal as a hostess. Ms. Lee joined the Times in New York as a staff reporter a year and a half after graduating from Harvard in 1999. Now she covers environmental policy while doubling as the de facto political correspondent for the Sunday style section, writing stories about the scene among young campaign volunteers and the buzz surrounding Washington-based television show "K Street."

But it's the synergy among the young overachievers — who make up the bulk of her guests — that's making her the life of the party. It's as if, in one quick year, Ms. Lee has single-handedly reinvented the old-style Washington mixer for the Friendster set. Her gatherings provide a setting for young reporters to meet fledgling politicians before either one blows up into the next Bob Woodward or James Carville.

"She creates connections for people who aren't connected yet," says Barbara Martinez, 25, a friend of Ms. Lee's who worked at the Washington Post.

"Maybe she's not Katharine Graham yet," says Julian Barnes, 32, an investigative reporter for US News & World Report who has co-hosted a party with Ms. Lee. "But there's something that evokes that."

In some ways, the title has been years in the making for Ms. Lee, who colleagues say has always been a masterful networker. She sends unsolicited emails to writers she admires. She sits in the front row and introduces herself to speakers at conferences.

At the Harvard Crimson, where she was vice president, she created a guide to help younger reporters get internships, and she continues to update her job advice on the student newspaper's Web site five years later.

After a year at the Times' New York headquarters, she organized a series of lunchtime writing workshops with speakers like the paper's executive editor and columnists. About a year later, in the wake of the Jayson Blair scandal, she spearheaded a letter of recommendations, ultimately signed by herself and 18 other staffers, to a committee that was set up to investigate how Mr. Blair got away with making up stories. Ms. Lee, who was posted in Washington, sent out as many as three drafts a day.

In Washington, scrolling down her Web-based RSVP lists to see the high-profile invitees has become routine for guests, who are amazed at the range of people Ms. Lee befriends.

In New York, where Ms. Lee began covering technology for the business section of the Times, she quickly became the reporter who organized parties to celebrate promotions, welcome interns (only months after she had been hired), and say good-bye to departing reporters. Sometimes she got the Times to cover the bill at a bar; other times she loaned out her services to cook at a friend's apartment.

Colleagues also remember Ms. Lee, who moved to the Circuits section after a year, coordinating outings to watch the outdoor movies in Bryant Park, only to nod off as soon as the movie started rolling.

As testament to Ms. Lee's friendliness, a friend recalls that the reporter struck up a conversation with a take-out food delivery person who was dropping off an order at her hotel while she was on assignment in Defiance, Ohio. Ms. Lee, on the spot, ended up inviting the delivery woman, a Taiwanese-American college student who was majoring in journalism, to share a hotel room with her and other reporters at an Asian American Journalists Association convention in San Diego a few months later.

A Times business reporter, Jennifer Bayot, 23, remembers asking Ms. Lee why she put herself out to help people so often; at the conference, for example, she could have had the hotel room to herself.

"She went into this economic thing, 'The marginal benefit of the people I get to help is so much more than the marginal cost to me.' I thought, 'Not everyone would think of it that way,'" Ms. Bayot recalls.

Bubbly though she may be, Ms. Lee is no Tara Reid. So sensitive to alcohol that she hardly ever drinks (a few sips of liquor get her drunk, friends say) she's also been known to pad off to bed early when her guests are still mid-conversation.

As a host, she's a fretter, rolling her homemade dumplings or picking up plastic cups behind her guests rather than mingling; more likely to wear baggy drawstring pants than form-fitting French Connection ensembles; frugally catering her parties with supplies from Costco; co-hosting often to defray the cost and credit. (Ms. Lee grew up in Harlem, and until Harvard, had only attended public schools.) No coat check or catered hors d'œuvres here — Ms. Lee cooks from scratch.

She gets embarrassed when people point out how often she throws parties — and friends say the guest lists rotate, so it's hard to pin down a tally.

"I definitely get the sense that she's entertaining all the time," says Senate staffer James Stern, 24. (Weekly is the going estimate when Ms. Lee is not out of town for work.)

In an online Q&A with Times readers a year and a half ago, she recalled close friend Adam Hickey's assessment of her as a multitasker. "My friend...tells me that I 'alt-tab through life,'" she wrote, referring to a keystroke that switches between programs on a computer screen.

"I think she likes meeting people and watching other people meet each other," says Mr. Hickey, echoing the hypotheses of many other guests and friends.

That much was clear when, in anticipation of her move to D.C., Ms. Lee sent an e-mail to more than 500 members of a recent Harvard graduates mailing list looking for an apartment and inviting them to drop her a line.

“I would love to make new friends down in D.C.,” she wrote.

The work had already begun to pay off by the time she moved in. “Within 10 days she had the best party I’d been to in Washington,” recalls Anne Hull, 42, a Washington Post national correspondent.

Ms. Lee had only been covering the EPA for about a week but had as her guests, in Ms. Hull’s estimation, about three “high-placed sources,” as well as a “shaggy conservationist” and Times reporter Richard Oppel Jr.

“In one week she knew about 10 times as many people as I know,” says Ms. Hull, who moved to D.C. a year and a half ago. “There were your typical wonky people, young and middle-aged, but probably half the room had not seen ‘West Wing’ and listened to Radiohead and not Norah Jones.”

Guests outside the buttoned-up norm have included a mortician from Louisiana, a Foggy Bottom-based psychic with a cable access show, and a waiter Ms. Lee struck up a conversation with at a pan-Asian restaurant.

The parties just kept coming. The apartment, which she rents with a roommate, is in an out-of-the-way section of Washington near the convention center. But its roof deck has views of the Capitol and the Washington monument and the owner left her modern art and baby grand piano behind. As friends see it, the 1,500-square-foot space invites entertaining.

The first indication of Ms. Lee’s elaborate style was at her Chinese New Year party last February. On top of the authentic almond, milk tea, and red bean mixes and tapioca drops for Taiwanese bubble tea, Ms. Lee attracted as wide a range of guests — from toddlers to Washington interns to Ms. Abramson, who brought some Asian-style sauces — as her guests had ever seen inside the Beltway.

The dam had burst. And out came crepe parties, impromptu Sunday brunches, and numerous summer barbecues, including a Crimson alumni party where Mr. Norquist, a business staffer on the paper in the late 1970s, stopped in. He didn’t stay long.

Hundreds showed up at her Halloween party, which featured a smoke machine and a crystal ball reader she found through the Harvard grapevine. There was some unplanned entertainment as well: A few impatient guests decided to relieve themselves off her balcony early in the morning. Ms. Lee’s apartment has only one bathroom.

A jazz singer she knew from summer camp performed at her holiday party in December. This Saturday, she’s hosting a concert. A mahjongg group is in the works.

“I always call her ‘Lucky Jenny.’ She’s like a little rabbit’s foot,” says Ms. Hull.

Luck is something her family thought about when giving her the middle initial “8” as a teenager. After too many identity confusions with her popular name, she and her parents, who immigrated to New York from Taiwan in the 1970s, added the digit — the most auspicious numeral in China. It’s spelled out “Eight” on her New York driver’s license, according to the Department of Motor Vehicles, meaning her middle initial could be less dramatically rendered “E.”

As an intern at the Boston Globe 7 1 /2 years ago, Ms. Lee penned a story on the front page of the living section entitled “Yes, 8 is My Middle Name.” In November, she was the only reporter honored alongside Britney Spears and Demi Moore in Esquire’s “Women We Love” issue.

“Because she’s got the best byline since R.W. Apple Jr.” the entry reads.

Those wondering how Ms. Lee does it were treated to a rare insight when she received a story tip at the beginning of a Friday evening cocktail party in the spring. As the several dozen guests sipped merlot, she holed herself up in her room for several hours interviewing sources for an article that appeared the next day.

Ms. Martinez, a friend who was at the party, recalls, “I remember thinking, ‘She wrote that while we were all drinking in her living room.’”

This was recently in our local newspaper (The Lancaster Eagle-Gazette) "40 Years Ago" column:

March 13, 1964:

The Buckeye Mart discount department store, 121 N. Memorial Drive, (Lancaster, Ohio) offered the album, "Beatle Mania" for 87 cents. It had Beatles hits performed by The Liverpools.

[The site where Buckeye Mart once stood was later converted into The Charlie Horse Palace Night Club and is now the Sheriff's Office (!)]

April 02, 1964:

Local Restaurants advertised their menu offerings and specials. B-W Drive-In, 540 E. Main St, had "Spanish Hot Dogs" for 15 cents; Dairy Queen, 1150 E. Main St., had hot fudge sundaes for 24 cents; West Side Pizza Shop 323 Washington Ave., sold a large Pepperoni and mushroom pizza for $1.75; Boyer's Restaurant, corner of Main and Cherry Streets, offered chicken and noodles with four side dishes plus cake and coffee for $1 and Burger Chef, 1105 E. Main St., was having the un-hamburger/ non-cola offering of a melted cheese and large orange drink for 35 cents.

[Dr. M sez: Dig those crazy prices. Dairy Queen is still in the same location!

Boyer's was where The Bike Shop is now. I ate there with my grandma and grandpa when I was about 5. In 1977-78, this address was briefly Tumbleweeds Records, one of the last mom and pop record stores in town, where I bought many of my first rock albums. Buzzard's Nest- part of a chain of record stores opened at Hocking Mall by K-Mart and put them out of business. The Burger Chef location is now Vanity Cleaners.]

Those were the days my friends, we thought they'd never end,
